

INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS

The international business secondary major is designed to provide students with an understanding of the international business environment. Over the past 50 years, businesses have experienced heightened globalization that was unthinkable in the recent past. While this trend has been widely credited with numerous technological and economic advances, it has also ushered in a period of unprecedented economic and social disruption with ramifications for businesses around the world. Increased awareness of these consequences has recently led to a global re-evaluation of how business should be conducted internationally. Contemporary issues related to environmental concerns, political instability, and human rights have only made international business decisions more complicated for organizations.

For undergraduate curriculum in business, secondary major in International Business.

Administered by the Department of Management and Entrepreneurship.

Whether you desire a career working internationally or simply want to understand how the broader business environment affects fundamental organizational decisions for domestic firms, our International Business (IBUS) offerings provide a broad global perspective to inform your world view. Specifically, the IBUS major is designed to help students develop global business acumen by highlighting how business intersects with politics, economic considerations, and cultures around the world.

The major is designed to provide a strong common foundation in international business with two required international overview courses.

In addition, students are encouraged to take additional coursework with relevance to their business and career interests, with business-specific courses spanning numerous functional areas and general cultural classes covering numerous regions of the world. Students also have the opportunity to shape their international exposure via multiple study abroad options or via additional coursework at Iowa State.
